Curator's Note

Symphony of Flames— These words are not just the mere title of this exhibition but a reflection of the profound artistry and thought that permeates the artworks of Akkitham Narayanan. At first glance, his paintings seem enigmatic, their meanings elusive amidst the bold strokes and vibrant hues. Witnessing his creative process, where each movement is a delicate dance, one recognizes the hidden beauty within its illustration. In the interplay of colours and geometric forms in his artworks, a flame emerges, with its subtle yet powerful aura. The flame sometimes appears as a solitary deeya (oil lamp) lighting a small temple in the middle of a dark forest, sometimes as the soft glow accompanying a scholar immersed in his manuscripts, or as a distant light illuminating the vast night sky of a warm desert. The flame, a symbol of radiance and enlightenment, flickers within the structured shapes of his compositions, born from the deepest reaches of his creativity. He also captures the forms and lines which personify the ancient rituals of tantra.

Born in an orthodox Brahmin family, his childhood was spent in the village of Kumaranellur in the Palakkad district, of Kerala. He grew up in a disciplined household, where art was given an essential seat in developing oneself. Apart from drawing inspiration from his life in Kerela, Akkitham's artistic expression was also drawn from the teachings of eminent figures such as sculptor and painter D. P. Roy Choudhury and renowned artist K. C. S. Paniker. As a student, he was schooled according to the techniques used by the masters of the Bengal School of Art. His initial art training helped him be a professional artist, however, to evolve into the artist he wanted to be, he had to relinquish these learned forms in pursuit of a style uniquely his own.

In his artworks, there is a gradual transition from thick impasto to fine use of colours as he builds his layers on the canvas. These layers, meticulously built, create the illusion of a magical kaleidoscope, which reveals new and mesmerizing patterns with each turn. In his exploration as an artist, he reached Paris, the mecca of the art world. He originally came to Paris to study at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts on a government scholarship. There, he explored his depths as an artist by delving into the modern art of Europe. In the City of Lights, he found his artistic identity and a place to call his second home. He has been living in Paris for the past fifty-seven years, and despite the distance from his birthplace, his philosophy and artistic vision remain deeply connected to his roots, harmonizing the wisdom of his heritage with the boldness of contemporary abstraction.

This time spent with Akkitham has created a special place in my heart for art, most notably when he was humming lines from Jayadeva's Geet Govinda while painting—

*Rati sukha sare gatam abhisare Madana manohara vesham
Na kuru nitambini gamana...*

A place that is blissful, connubial, and quintessentially, Gone, in a preset place
Arousable, lovely, heart-stealing, with mien
Don't delay in going, follow him, the lord of your heart

These lines from Jayadev beautifully capture the passionate love between Radha and Krishna, weaving a tale that, on the surface, mirrors the emotional depth and sentimentality of a human love story. Nevertheless, the true essence of his poetry lies in its profound symbolism—the union of the human soul with the divine. Writing in the 12th Century, Jayadeva was ahead of his time, portraying Radha and Krishna's love as a transcendent experience of divine ecstasy. His words evoke a deep, almost mystical pleasure, reminiscent of the soul's own yearning for communion with the Almighty. This very bliss finds a kindred expression in the art of Akkitham. Through his art, we witness an invocation of spiritual rapture that bridges the earthly and the divine, making the human experience of love a path to the eternal.

I compose abstract forms that evoke the images of my life with my family in Kerala, where cultural, spiritual and ritualism were very much present.

The diagrams of the Mandala/kalam or Kolam made on the earth, coloured white (rice flour), yellow (turmeric), black (grain of burnt rice grain), red ( a mix of turmeric with lemon) and other elements for religious ceremonies along with the folk forms have had a strong influence on me. My work today is the result of these old and new experiences that I have accumulated before and after my visit to Europe.

He does not title his paintings but rather gives importance to the mystery the painting creates.

He has been known for his signature geometric shapes and abstract forms for many decades and has no intention of changing his style. However, he has made some changes in his use of colours, in response to changing trends and the environment in which he lives. His paintings are inspired by the tantra tradition, offering unique interpretations of symbols and shapes from myth and religion. He creates fusion works that combine Indian tantra tradition with European geometric art.

While the choice of subject necessitates a ritual, Narayanan at work in his studio, is in conflict between the discipline of an ancient ritual and the freedom his emotions demand while painting. He breaks free of this internal conflict by breaking out of the geometric forms through the colours on his canvas.
